CUSHING A VICTOR.

His Straight American Blows Are Too Much for Bartlett.

The Englishman Meekly Withdraws in the Fourteenth Round.

Tame Ending of a Long. Expected Event of the Prize-Ring.

The fight with skin gloves for $500 a side, Queensberry's rules, between Mike Cushing nd Harry Bartlett, the Englishman, which has interested the sporting fraternity in this vicinity during the past month, took place shortly after midnight this morning in a pavilion near the Clifton race track, in New

The battle was a great disappointment to those who saw it. Bartlett had no sand and quit in the middle of the fourteenth round, much to the surprise of every one, including his seconds, Tommy Barnes and Tom Higham, of Boston.

Both men were in splendid condition. When they weighed in last week Bartlets weighed 126% pounds and Cushing 126%, but weighed 1265¢ pounds and Cushing 1265¢, but on their stepping into the ring it was readily seen that the Englishman had gained considerably in weight and was several pounds heavier than Cushing. He looked stronger, but his swinging blows did not have the telling effect that the straight, American blows of Cushing produced.

Frank Stevenson, the popular sporting man, was referee, and Ed Plummer and Johnny Eckhardt were timeksepers. Cushing was seconded by Denny Costigan and Tom Henry.

Henry.

It was raining a cold drizzle and the moisture-isden wind blew at a brisk rate sgainst the bare bodies of the athletes, there being no sides to the pavilion. But the men did not seem to mind this in the least, and while the spectators shivered they danced sround
the floor of the ring with apparent comfort.

When the men shook hands, Bartlett said, pleasantly: "Well, I hope the best man will win."

pleasantly: "Well, I hope the best man will win."

His hope was realized. Cushing forced the fighting from the start, doing nearly all of the leading and repeatedly forcing the Englishman over the ropes near his corner.

Cushing's objective point was Bartlett's wind, and although he landed his left! glove on Bartlett's left eye and cheek and nose many times, his most effective blows were planted with his right heavily against the Englishman's ribs.

When Bartlett led, which was seldom, it was feared he would break his arm on Mike's guard. His blows were awkward and only raised a few little lumps on Mike's head.

First blood was allowed Cushing in the fourth round. He cut Bartlett over the heart by a well-directed blow with his right and also drew a little red stream from the nose with his left.

by a well-directed blow with his right and also drew a little red stream from the nose with his left.

In the sixth round Mike slipped a little in dodging a left-hander, and as he did so, Bartlett followed up his advantage with a blow on Mike's jaw that toppled him over, and Referee Stevenson allowed Bartlet first knock-down.

When the fighters came up for the thirteenth round they were nearly as fresh as when they began, and neither had received any severe or disfiguring punishment. Cushing had four small lumps on his forshead and Bartlett's left cheek was red, his left eye slightly swollen, and his left side near his heart, showed the effects of Cushing's right.

Bartlett's heart was gone at this time, and he tred to lose the fight by fouling his antagonist, as he afterwards admitted. He backheeled Cushing, throwing him heavily to the floor amid shouts of disgust by the spectators, and was cautioned by Referee Stevenson just as time was called.

In the fourteenth Cushing landed his left on the Englishman's nose and then two good blows on his wind, when he dropped his guard, offered his hand to Mike and said he had had enough.

Mike was completely surprised, as was every one else; and a cry of "Our" was raised, while Bartlett's seconds tried to have him centinue the battle. He would not fight any more and Cushing was declared the winner.

Bartlett won sixteen boxing competitions

Bartlett won sixteen boxing competitions in England, defeated Billy Watson in ten rounds, Billy Cheesey in seven rounds, and Jake Hyams, who was knocked out by Jack McAniffe, in a ten-round glove contest. His only battle in this country was his victory over Jack Farrell, in two and one-half rounds.

MR. CLEVELAND'S NEW HOME

A SUIT OF APARTMENTS AWAITING HIM IN THE VICTORIA.

Everything is in readiness at the Victoria Hotel for the arrival of ex-President Cleveland and his party from Washington.

The ex.President's party will consist of Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland and Mrs. Folsom, and the suit of rooms which they will occupy at the Victoria is No. 116.

It consists of five rooms, a parlor, library, dining-room and two bedrooms. They are located on the second floor of the Fifth avenue and Twenty-seventh street corner, and are the apartments which have always been occupied by the ex-President during his visits to this city while in office, Mrs. Cleveland and her mother have ofter ocupied them together, and Proprietor Hoyt thinks they will be quite at home in his legant hostelry.

It is said that Mr. Cleveland will do a good deal of his work there.

The Geriach, which is only a block distant, is in plain view from the window of the Clevelands' apartments in the Victoria, and in case it is decided to take up their permanent abode in that building, as reported some time ago, Mrs. Cleveland will find it very exhvenient whenever she wishes to take a run over to the Geriach to see how the work of fitting up the new house is getting on.

With the ex-President will come Col. Dan Lamont, his wife and baby and a maid. They will also stay for a while at the Victoria, and will occupy suit 340, on the fourth floor, on the Fifth avenue side, consisting of a parlor and three bedrooms.

It is expected that Postmaster-General Dickinson and his family will arrive from Washington at the same time as the ex-President. Rooms have already been engaged for them on the second floor adjoining Mr. Cleveland's suit.

There is some talk, too, of Secretary Fairchild's becoming a guest of the Victoria as soon as he can arrange his affairs and get away from Washington, so that there is a prospect that Mr. Cleveland will still find himself surrounded by his old official friends and advisers.

YOUNG SIGEL'S EXAMINATION.

Secretary of Agriculture Jeremiah McLean Rusk was born in Morgan County, O. He was a stage driver and his route crossed the towpath which Garfield travelled, and the two struck up a friendship which never ended. In 1853 he moved to Wisconsin. He served in the war, and received the rank of brigadier-general. Then he went to Congress for six years. In 1881 he was offered by President Garfield the offices of Charge d'Affaires to Uruguay and Paraguay and Public Printer. He declined. He was elected Governor in 1881, and was twice re-elected. He was the most popular Governor Wisconsin ever had. The examination of Robert Sigel, who was arrested a few days ago on charges of forgery and extortion in the Pension Office, came up
